

About The Tool Kit...

This tool kit has been organized by category. Violence or hate behavior prevention programs that describe activities in which communities and students can participate are listed under the Activities section. Exemplary books, magazines and curricula materials are included under the Publications section. Available videos which cover violence or hate crime topics are listed under the Video section. And finally, new hate behavior prevention information available on the internet is listed under the Web Sites section.

Additionally, each resource is identified by Appropriate Grade Level, Audience, and Caliber — Blueprint, Promising, Classic or Emerging (Blueprint and Promising programs have been determined by the United States Department of Education's Safe and Drug-Free School and Community Program research; Classic and Emerging programs have been selected by the California Hate Crime Task Force). Also included are brief summaries of ten hate crime projects which were funded by USDOE in 1996. These projects are not ranked for quality. Web Sites are not rated either since most are very new and, as yet, untested for effectiveness.

Four specific criteria were used by the Center for the Study and Prevention of Violence (CSPV) for selecting and identifying Blueprint or Promising programs for USDOE. The extent to which each program satisfied these four criteria determined whether they were designated Blueprint or Promising. These four criteria are:

1. Strong Research Design. Experimental designs with random assignment, low rates of participant attrition and adequate measurement provide the greatest level of confidence.
2. Evidence of Significant Prevention or Deterrent Effects. This is an obvious minimal criterion for claiming program effectiveness.
3. Multiple Site Replication. Replication establishes the robustness of the program, its prevention effects and its exportability to new sites. Adequate procedures for monitoring the integrity of implementation must be in place, and this can be established only through actual experience with replications.
4. Sustained Effects. This selection criterion requires that the short-term effects of a program be sustained beyond treatment or participation in the designed intervention.

Programs that did not meet the rigors of the above criteria were not designated Blueprint programs, but were selected as Promising programs. Promising programs have a demonstrated quantitative effect on one or more of the following outcome variables: delinquency/crime, violence, drug use, and predelinquent aggression. Promising programs can be single site, unreplicated projects or have a small effect on outcome measures.

Programs highlighted on the following pages are diverse. Some are evaluations of curricula, comprehensive school-community programs, out-of-school interventions, and school reform efforts. Others are summaries of longitudinal research studies focusing on inter-related behaviors. Some are included because they are classics, while some are emerging with promise in prevention research.

The most recent contact information is included for each program or resource. If the identified contact is not helpful, please call the Alameda County Office of Education's Hate Crime Prevention Office at (510) 670-4220 for additional assistance.

Activities

The Anti-Defamation League's World of Difference Training

This institute is an anti-bias, anti-hate crime training program which gives teachers the skills necessary to identify, understand, and effectively combat bias-related incidents and hate crime. A formal curriculum is included which emphasizes multi-cultural, classroom-ready lessons which can be integrated into their existing curriculum. Resources are also included on how to create a bias-free home.

Bullying Prevention Program

Each blueprint program describes a model program in detail and includes evaluation results and practical experiences encountered by those using the intervention. This program is based on Dan Olweus' (pronounced Olvase) research outlined in his book Bullying at School: What We Know and What We Can Do. This bullying study involved over 2,500 students (grades 4 - 7) from 42 schools in Bergen, Norway in 1983. Findings indicated:

- a 50 percent reduction in bully/victim problems during a two year period following the intervention program,
- no 'displacement' of bullying from the school grounds to the way to and from school,
- a clear reduction in general antisocial behavior,
- a marked improvement in school 'climate', and
- an increase in student satisfaction with school life.

The book details effective intervention strategies which have been replicated by Sue Limber at the University of South Carolina. This program has as its major goal the reduction of victim/bully problems among primary and secondary school children.

Functional Family Therapy

The goal of this activity is to assess family behaviors that maintain delinquent behavior, modify communication in dysfunctional families, train family members to negotiate effectively, and set clear rules about privileges and responsibilities. Treatment includes approximately 30 hours of therapy coupled with supportive system services, such as remedial education, job training, and school placement. This is an out-of-school intervention that targets youths who are chronically and seriously delinquent. This intervention would be a valuable referral resource for schools that identify such youths and want to provide an effective intervention for them.

Peaceful Playgrounds: A Teacher's Guide to Recess Games and Markings

A guide for developing and transforming existing playgrounds into "old-fashioned" play areas for elementary students. The guide outlines over 30 games including four squares, handball, pickle and hop scotch. It even allows students to create their own versions of traditional line games. The idea is to re-teach students how to play together using a consistent set of rules, procedures for handling conflicts without adult intervention and consistent expectations from school personnel. The playground games are inexpensive to construct and focus on hand-eye coordination, sequencing of letters and numbers, body and space awareness, locomotion practice, cooperative skill-building, jumping skills, and balance. Instructions for each game include the objective, the equipment needed and enumerated procedures. The concept of Peaceful Playgrounds was developed 20 years ago by Ms. Bossenmeyer, a physical education specialist from California. She has personally designed over 100 of them. $12.50, 50 pages

Project PATHE

This is a school organizational project which simultaneously alters the organizational and management structures and provides treatment for high-risk youth (a pull-out program that provides tutoring and counseling within the existing school structure). The intervention is intended to increase students' educational achievement and occupational attainment, increase bonding to the school and reduce levels of disorder in the school. Early results from test sites look promising.

Stop the Hate

This is a comprehensive curriculum program funded by the USDOE in 1996. The one-year pilot program is a school/community effort that involves four key components: (1) teachers and administrators, (2) youth, (3) parents and families, and (4) community. The program is designed to counter the cycle of bias, hatred and distrust that leads to violence and to develop strategies to promote understanding, trust and positive intergroup relations.

Quantum Opportunities

This program provides educational training, employment and developmental and service activities, coupled with a sustained relationship between a peer group and a caring adult, for small groups of disadvantaged teens over the four years of high school. Early results show significant differences favoring the experimental group in graduation rates, admission to post-secondary educational programs, arrest rates, and teen pregnancy. However, the average cost of the program was $2,500 per student, per year.

Erasing the Line - A Summer 1998 Art and Literature Journal

Erasing the Line is a culmination of artwork and writings of the Skyline High School's Youth Together group, a project of ARC Associates, Inc. in Oakland. The works included in the pages are a direct result of conversations, workshops and daily living experiences of each participant in the group. These students from Oakland Unified School District are one group of five under an ARC Hate Crime Project. Other student groups were from Berkeley H.S., Richmond H.S., Fremont H.S., and Castlemont H.S. The goals of all groups are:

- Supporting each other throughout high school
- Teaching themselves, other students and their parents about the difficult racial problems existing today, and
- Recruiting ninth graders into the Youth Together program

Part of the Youth Together experience included reading books, doing homework and taking tests. It also included tracking fights, perceived unfair treatment of students, and hate-motivated incidents. During the summer of 1998, students produced this literary and creative art magazine, where everyone contributed by writing or drawing about their different experiences or thoughts. It includes poetry, stories, interviews and biographies.

Healing the Hate: A Prevention Curriculum for Middle Schools

This book outlines a curriculum that is based on research findings and it is multidisciplinary in its approach. Results of the study are based on field testing representative of demographically and geographically diverse communities throughout America. The approach taken in this publication involves combining current methods of prejudice reduction with identified violence prevention strategies which, together, provide a unique curriculum designed to reduce crimes based on intolerance. The curriculum reflects the following general principles:

- Violence and Prejudice are Preventable
- Early Intervention is Necessary
- Empathy Building is a Necessary Skill in Promoting Respect for Diversity
- Awareness and Appreciation of Differences is Central to Reducing Hate Violence
- Cooperative Learning is an Important Piece of the Puzzle
- Critical Thinking Principles Must be Taught
- Perspective Taking is Fundamental to Reducing Violence and Prejudice
- Media Literacy is Developed from Studying Examples of Stereotyping in the Media
- Interactively Needs to be Part of the Program Design to Encourage Debates about Issues and Ideas
- Inequality and Institutional Violence and Prejudice Needs to be Taught

The book was designed for teachers in middle schools and for other professionals working with youth. The curriculum deals with the extent of hate crime in America and strategies that are proving effective in reducing hate crimes among youth.

The LADDER Project

Learning About Decisions, Diversity, Education, Responsibility (LADDER) focuses on three programmatic domains in support of youth development and conflict prevention. The document is designed to increase bicultural competencies of youth through the use of prejudice-reducing strategies. the focus is on seventh and eight graders, using an existing model which includes a variety of school-based, after-school and family support activities. The activities include human relations life skills classes, after-school clubs to bring together youth from different cultural and racial backgrounds, and home visits with families to share information on student progress.

Perry Preschool Program

This program began in Michigan in 1962 as a longitudinal study of children from poor African American families. Children ages 3 and 4 attended a preschool program that focused on cognitive, language, social and behavioral development. The High/Scope model that was tested emphasized active child-initiated learning, problem solving, decision making and a high degree of interaction between adults and children and among the children themselves. Children who participated showed an improvement in several areas of social and academic achievement areas by that time they turned 19.

Starting Small: Teaching Tolerance in Preschool and the Early Grades

This book profiles seven classrooms in which teachers are helping young children build inclusive, equitable, caring communities across differences that too often divide. The teacher's approaches are as varied as their faces yet they share three crucial habits: reflecting continually on their own assumptions; talking with their peers about how these factors conflict as well as coincide; and practicing social skills as diligently as mental or physical ones. Two kinds of sidebars supplement the stories: "Reflections" are research-based essays addressing specific themes or developmental aspects of teaching tolerance, and "Applications" offering practical ideas for incorporating these concepts into classroom activities. The over-riding theme: Teaching tolerance effectively seems difficult to at any age, but everything is easier when you Start Small. Early Warning, Timely Response

This August, 1998 publication presents a brief summary of the research on violence prevention and intervention and crisis response in schools. It tells members of school communities-especially administrators, teachers, staff members and families:

1. What to look for—early warning signs that relate to violence and other troubling behaviors
2. What to do—the action steps that schools can take to prevent violence and other troubling behaviors to intervene and get help for troubled children
3. How to respond to school violence when it occurs, and
4. How to create and maintain peaceful campuses

U.S. Department of Justice - Kid's Page

Attorney General Janet Reno has developed a DOJ web page for kids. The site is intended for children (and their parents) in Kindergarten through 5th grade. The site promotes discussion among children, parents and teachers about prejudice and discrimination, sensitizes elementary school-age children to the unfairness and hurt of prejudice, gives children who may be victims some problem-solving skills and shows children what they can do when they find themselves in the role of bystander to help de-escalate hurtful acts. There is new information on the site every month and the kid-friendly format, color-enhanced format makes the site fun and informative for all visitors.
